Program Philosophy:

We strongly believe that children learn through active exploration of their environment. Optimal learning takes place when we provide learning opportunities that build on the children’s existing knowledge and prior experiences. Children first learn simple, concrete concepts and then use these concepts to understand more complex ideas. Through the interaction with peers, adults and various materials, children strengthen social skills and continue to learn about the world around them. In both programs learning opportunities offered are based on the developing interests of children meeting their age appropriate social-emotional, cognitive and physical needs. As children initiate play, Hilltop teachers are able to help them learn by becoming investigators and co-collaborators in their play and by asking questions that encouraging them to think and discover more about their world. The teachers closely observe, photograph and document the processes that unfold, the interests, investigation and explorations, as a way to assist children in the opportunity to recall, plan and investigate further. Children then learn to express or work through new concepts and further their understanding by recreating what they have learned in multiple ways such as: painting, drawing, music, dramatic play, clay, building, constructing, woodworking, writing, etc. Our open-door policy invites and encourages participation from parents and family members to further enrich the Hilltop curriculum.

Daily activities may include:

- Group activities (stories, songs, sharing, planning, etc.)
- Creative art (painting, drawing, construction)
- Language and literacy enrichment (journal and creative writing, etc.)
- Science experiments and cooking
- Outdoor play, exploration and gardening
